

The Time to Think Coaching Course

MITZI WYMAN

Build on your experience of the Thinking Partnership Course and bring the Thinking Environment fully into your coaching practice, placing the independent thinking of your client at the centre.

If you have completed the Thinking Partnership Course, you will have experienced what happens when someone gives you full attention and trusts your ability to think for yourself. This course builds directly on that experience.

What this course offers you

This advanced course gives you the opportunity to refine your skills, understand what makes this approach distinct and develop the confidence to use it with clients in a grounded and practical way.

- Deepen your capacity to give generative attention and create the conditions in which people think well for themselves.
- Learn to follow a client's thinking and trust their ability to think independently.
- Develop your confidence through paired coaching practice and reflection on what supports your client's thinking.
- Explore thoughtful conversations about difference through the Diversity session.
- Consider how to develop a client base or coaching practice using this approach.

Working with the approach

We explore how Incisive Questions arise from listening, how this approach differs from more directive coaching, and how it ignites a client's thinking.

I draw on my experience of using the Thinking Environment in coaching, leadership development and complex organisational settings, including when people face pressure, uncertainty or important decisions.

The Coaching Course and Practicum

MITZI WYMAN

How we will work

The course is practical and experiential. We work together through demonstrations, thinking partnerships, paired coaching practice and reflective discussion. The small group allows space for careful attention to your learning and questions.

Between sessions you practise coaching conversations so that your learning becomes immediately usable. Many participants find that the course strengthens their coaching and deepens their understanding of the Thinking Environment itself.

Your course fee includes

- Three live online training days in a small group, with coaching practice between sessions.
- The course handbook and supporting resources.
- A six-month Practicum following the taught course, with four supervision sessions to consolidate your practice.
- An ongoing active alumni community.

Qualification

Successful completion of the course and Practicum, and membership of the Time to Think Collegiate, lead to accreditation as a Time to Think Coach and listing on the Time to Think website.

Investment

£1,650 per person, including supervision. Special rates are available for health and social care participants.

A 10% pathway discount applies when you enrol in the Thinking Partnership and Coaching courses upfront: £2,376 in total, saving £264.

Dates and enquiries

Dates to be agreed. For the latest course dates and arrangements, visit the regularly updated website. All published times are UK time.

mitziwyman.com/programme-dates.html

To explore whether the course is right for you, book a conversation with me.